Steamer Helen H. Benedict in Port at Georgetown.

RESCUED WITH DIFFICULTY

Capt. Bracket Tells How the Men Were Taken From the Ill-Fated Steamship J. W. Hawkins-Rescue Was Hard Workon Account of High Seas-Number of Lives Lost.

Tied up at a dock at one of the wharves at Georgetown is the steamship Helen H. Benedict of the American Merchants' Line of New Haven, Conp. This vessel gained reputation for the part her crew took in the rescue of passengers on the ill-fated steamer J. W. Hawkins when that craft was bound on a filibustering expedition to the island of Cuba last winter.

The captain of the Benedict is J. W. Brock et, an unassuming man, probably past mid dleage. He has spent the greater portion of his eventful life opon the water and in common with all sailors likes to spin yarns. but the thrilling and interesting tale be relates of the rescue of the Cuban-Amercans from a watery grave is a real one. The facts concerning the disaster, noted in the log books of the Helen H. Benedict, and related by Capt. Brocket, were told to a Times reporter when he visited the vessel today. The story is as

diet was steaming in a northeasterly diroute from Norfolk to Boston, laden with Mantauk Point, and sixty-five miles from Fire Island, the captain sighted a fag of distress on a small steamer two miles away This was before 8 o'clock in the morning REACHED THE FOUNDERING VESSEL

The weather was cold, and owing to the high winds that had prevailed during the ight a very heavy sea was on. It re quired some time before the course of the edict could be directed toward the oundering vessel, and it was with great ifficulty that she was brought alongside he distressed steamer.

High waves were dashing over her deck while inside a sturdy band of Cuban patriols were working the pumps to save rives. The linwkins was a small craft and unfit for a heavy sea. She had been in dock for some time before the fitting out of the expedition, and soon after outting to sea sprong a leak.

On board were 125 men, nearly all of iem Cuban residents of New York, who ad enlisted in the cause of their native ountry, and were bound for the scene of the conflict. The Hawkins also carried a considerable quantity of arms and ammu-Cuban army,

As Capt. Brocket's yessel got within stance, the five small rowboats of the Hawkins were lowered, and the sinking ship abandoned. Those in the first boat, to the number of twenty-five, all of whom were Cubans, and for the most part ...ole to speak very plain English, were after a desperate struggle, picked op by the Benedict. Three other boats, contain ing seventy-five men, were hauled on oard the Brebe, another coaler from Philadelphia. The remaining boat was carried in an opposite direction, and fifteen of her twenty-five passengers were rescued by an unknown four-masted vessel. The remaining ten were swept overboard.

AN EXCITING RESCUE. On account of the rough sea, it was inpossible for the men to guide or row the ife-boats, and it was only possible to rescue any of them by getting alongside the boat, seizing the occupants, and pulling them on board as the waves dashed them up toward the deck. The last passenger to e rescued by the Benedict was an old army officer who had served in the tenyear war in Cuba. The old man lay in the bottom of the boat in a semi-conscious condition, and was nearly drowned before

Among the ten who lost their lives were wo Englishmen, and, it is thought, one American. None of the cargo of the Hawins was saved. As the rescuers were steaming away the

Hawkins went down. The Cubans were landed next morning at Vincyard Haven. Capt. Brocket is a kind-hearted sailor and treated the pa-tients in a cordial manner. As an expression of their gratitude their leader pre-sented the captain with a large nickelplated revolver, which one of the party had carried. This and two other similar pishtols were the only arms saved from the wreck. Capt. Brocket is Justly proud of this addition to his store of relics, gathered

The steamer Helen H. Benedict has three masts and is schooner rigged, of 1,200 tons. She is now being loaded with Cumberland coal to be transported to Boston or Salem. She has already been visited by a number of people who have beard of her heroic work of rescue. The Bene-dict will leave here Friday.
